Goals, Courses, Fields of Study

Goals: The Graduate Program in Religious Studies comprises programs of study leading to the MA and PhD degrees. The primary goal of both degree programs is to prepare persons for academic leadership in the field, and hence for professional careers as teacher-scholars in colleges, universities, and schools of theology. The MA degree program also aims to accommodate the qualified nonprofessional student interested in advanced work in religious studies within the context of the liberal arts and sciences.

Courses: All students in the Graduate Program in Religious Studies take four courses in common over a two-year period (one course each semester) which together constitute an ongoing Core Seminar in Religious Studies. The individual components are:

- Kell RELI 6301, The Philosophical Study of Religion
- Kell RELI 6302, Approaches to Asian Religions
- Kell RELI 6303, History, Theory, and Method in Religious Studies
- RELI 6304, Contemporary Approaches to the Study of Religion

Beyond these four courses, students in the MA program take an additional eighteen credit hours of course work, for a total of thirty credit hours. Students in the PhD program take an additional thirty-six credit hours, for a total of forty-eight credit hours.

ntended field of specialization, may include courses of three different types:

- 1. Regular courses in Southern Methodist University that are approved for graduate study in the student's field. (Undergraduate courses will be approved only if they have a particular relevance to the student's course of study and only if the student has reached a prior agreement with the instructor on additional work to be done to raise the requirements of the course to the graduate level.)
- 2. Directed study courses in which one or more students and a faculty member agree to meet not less than six times during the term to discuss the material under study and which require the submission of substantial written work to which the faculty member assigns grades as well as assigning an overall letter grade for the course as a whole.
- 3. Independent study courses in which the student and a faculty member agree on a bibliography for study that the student will pursue independently and which do not require either the submission of written work or the assignment of letter grades; rather, these courses are pass/fail and require one meeting near the end of the semester to determine completion of the reading..

Directed study and independent study courses are arranged individually by the student or students with an appropriate member of the faculty who is willing to undertake such a course.

Each student is encouraged to take advantage of regular courses to the extent that it is possible and . There is no limit to the number of courses a student may take in the form of directed study courses. MA students may take as much as six credit hours of work (two courses) in independent study, and PhD students may take as much as twelve credit hours

(four courses) of work in independent study. (If any credit has been waived in recognition of pertinent graduate work completed elsewhere, the amount of independent study credit permitted will be reduced accordingly.)

Students should be aware that, outside Perkins School of Theology and the Religious Studies Department in Dedman College, independent study courses may not be an option.

ation about specific course requirements that apply to students in the field of New Testament.

Fields of Study: Each student in the PhD program specializes in one of the following six fields of study:

- 1. Hebrew Bible/Old Testament
- 2. New Testament
- 3. The Christian Tradition
- 4. Systematic Theology
- 5. Religious Ethics [Christian Ethics]
- 6. Religion and Culture

These six fields of specialization require comprehensive field examinations as follows:

Hebrew Bible/Old Testament

1. Ancient Near Eastern, Hellenistic, and Greco-Roman Texts and Contexts This examination covers the historical background and literary milieu of the Hebrew Bible and their possible influence upon formation of the biblical texts and canon in (1) pre-exilic and exilic (pre-Assyrian, Assyrian, and Neo-Babylonian) periods and (2) post-exilic (Persian, Hellenistic, and Greco-Roman) periods. Successful completion of the exam will demonstrate mentioned periods and demonstrate his/her ability to employ these materials in biblical interpretation and to engage critically major modern and post-modern trends and theories pertaining to the study of the Hebrew Bible in different ancient contexts.

2. Hermeneutics and Basic Topics of Hebrew Bible Studies

This examination covers (1) the hermeneutical developments as they pertain to Hebrew Bible studies since the emergence of the modern worldview, with special consideration given to contemporary debates on social location of the reader and (2) basic topics in the study of particular biblical corpora and books. Successful completion of the exam demonstrates the study of these issues.

3. Methodologies of Hebrew Bible Studies

This examination covers diachronic/historical-critical and synchronic/literary-critical scholarly approaches to the Hebrew Bible. Successful completion of the exam will presuppositions underlying these approaches and of the scholarly debates about their strengths and limitations as well as his/her ability to apply one or more approaches from each group to specific texts of the Hebrew Bible.

4. Elective (chosen in view of th theories with one another and trace developments from the 1920s to the present.

2. History of Christian Ethics critical engagement with major figures, ideas, and developments in the history of Christian ethics, beginning with pre-Christian Greek and Hebrew ethics and continuing through Early Christianity, the Middle Ages, the Reformation period, and Early Modern religious thought.

- 3. Philosophical Ethics Successful completion with major issues, figures, and theories in moral philosophy from the seventeenth century to the present.
- 4. One of the following: Systematic Theology, Philosophical Theology, Biblical Ethics, Applied Ethics, or Ethics of another major religious tradition.

with another discipline that is closely related to the study of religious ethics, with theological and philosophical approaches to a specific moral problem, or with the history, figures, and issues in the ethics of another major religious tradition. The exam should also demonstrate the blem, or tradition in his/her dissertation research.

Religion and Culture

1. Modern Study of Religion

A member of the Steering Committee shall normally serve as convener of the faculty involved in each field for these purposes.

7. Amendments to these Principles of Governance may be proposed by any member of the faculty or by the Steering Committee. Any proposed amendment must be distributed in writing to all members of the faculty at least seven days prior to the meeting at which it is to be considered. In order to pass, an amendment must receive the support of a majority of the members of the faculty who are based in the Department of Religious Studies and a majority of the members of the faculty who are based in Perkins School of Theology.

The Degree Programs

Degree of Master of Arts: The requirements for the degree of Master of Arts are the following:

- satisfactory completion of thirty credit hours of approved course work, including the four courses of the Core Seminar in Religious Studies: RELI 6301, The Philosophical Study of Religion; RELI 6302, Approaches to Asian Religions; RELI 6303, History, Theory, and Method in Religious Studies; and RELI 6304, Contemporary Approaches to the Study of Religion;
- 2. passing an examination in an approved foreign language;
- 3. satisfactory completion of a master's thesis on an approved topic in one of the six fields of study.

The student is encouraged to develop an area of concentration in his or her eighteen hours of undesignated course work. A maximum of six credit hours may be taken in Independent Study courses. Concentrations in areas of scholarship represented primarily in the Department of Religious Studies in Dedman College are especially welcome. Students whose main interests are in areas represented in the typical theological curriculum are advised to consider the Master of Theological Studies degree in Perkins School of Theology as an alternative to the Master of Arts degree in the Graduate Program in Religious Studies.

Each student will be assigned an advisor in his or her anticipated area of concentration, to aid in the development of a plan of study. A thesis proposal, endorsed by a three-member thesis committee, is to be submitted to the Steering Committee for its approval. Approval of the proposal, normally occurring early in the fall term of the second year of study, will signify admission to candidacy for the MA degree, provided that the student has satisfactorily completed twenty-four hours of approved course work and has passed the required foreign language examination.

The language examination must be taken during the August examination period at the beginning of the first year. Students who do not pass at that time will be allowed to retake the examination during the January examination period of the first year.

The program normally occupies two academic years: one year of full-time course work (twenty-four credit hours) and one year involving six hours of course work the two remaining components of the Core Seminar, one each term and the writing of a thesis. In accordance with university policy, the maximum time allowed for completion of the degree is six years. Ordinarily, transfer credit is not allowed toward the degree.

However, a PhD student who, owing to a change of plans or circumstances, wishes to receive the MA rather than proceed to the Such a plan would normally involve the completion of at least thirty hours of course work, the passing of at least one language examination, and the completion of either an approved MA thesis or the four comprehensive field examination

- 3. Students in the two fields of biblical studies must take the second language examination no later than the June examination period of the first year; students who do not pass at that time will be allowed to retake the examination the following August. All other students must take the second language examination no later than August of the second year; students who do not pass at that time will be allowed to retake the examination in January of the second year. Students in biblical studies must pass their third and fourth language examinations no later than June of the third year.
- 4. The comprehensive field examinations must be completed no later than August of the third year.
- 5. The dissertation proposal must be submitted to the Steering Committee for approval no later

Policies on Time Limits:

- If requested, the GPRS will make accommodations to the course of study following the birth or adoption of a child. These accommodations might include allowing a student to take a leave of absence from the Program for at most one academic year (depending on complications and timing of the birth) and/or allowing a student to postpone exams (language and comprehensive) and other deadlines for the period of leave. In particular,
- C The student is not guaranteed stipend support for the period of leave. However, if a student chooses to take a period of leave, the Program will extend stipend support for one term past the term in which support would ordinarily have terminated. Health insurance benefits will be continued during the period of the leave, but for only one parental leave. A student on leave must verify his/her return date at least 6 months prior to re-entering the program in order to re-commence stipend support.

In special circumstances, exceptions to these policies may be granted upon petition to the Steering

Languages and Language Examinations

Language Examinations: The purpose of the language examinations is to ensure that the student is competent in reading and, when applicable, speaking the language in question and in using it in research. The student will be required to demonstrate competence in reading the various kinds of literature in the language in question that are relevant to scholarship in the student s area or field of religious studies. Thus, the language examiner is required to certify whether the student is or is not sufficiently competent in reading and,

Steering Committee for approval to be examined in that language. If a suitable examiner cannot be acquired by the GPRS, the student is responsible for providing evidence of competence sufficient to conduct research (e.g., a copy of a graded final exam in that language from an accredited course adequate for graduate research needs or a signed FLAS foreign language evaluation or an examination from another institution). The student must submit the petition to the Program Coordinator in writing no later than sixty days prior to the beginning of the examination period in which the student wishes to schedule the examination.

Administration of Language Examinations:

are available online or from the office of the Program Coordinator. The completed form, signed and the level of work described above for the practice teaching requirement, and it requires that the student does not take any compensation for the course (as the student is already being compensated in her or his stipend, as articulated in the letter of admission).

Guidelines for Preparing the Dissertation Proposal

The purpose of the doctoral dissertation is to contribute to the ongoing discussion of the problem with which it deals in the relevant field of specialization. Accordingly, the dissertation proposal the specified time limits seem a reasonable objective. Specifically, the dissertation proposal must include the following four components:

- 1. a statement of the specific question or problem to be investigated;
- 2. a statement of the reasons that make an investigation of this question or problem important and desirable both for the ongoing scholarly discussion in the relevant field and for the student individually;
- 3. a self-assessment by the student of her or his qualifications, including competences in relevant foreign languages, to carry out the proposed investigations; and
- 4. either a bibliography of the primary and secondary literature basic to the proposed investig bibliographic requirements of the investigation and of ways and means of meeting those requirements.

Excluding the bibliography, the dissertation proposal should be five to ten typewritten pages (1500 to 3000 words) in length.

Before submitting the dissertation proposal for approval, the student must secure its endorsement by the prospective dissertation advisor, by two additional members of the SMU faculty, and by one reader from outside the SMU faculty, all of whom are willing to work with the student in satisfying the two final requirements for the PhD degree (i.e., the completion of the dissertation and the oral examination).

Procedures for Preparing and Securing the Approval of the Dissertation and for the Oral Examination Accordingly, prior to the first date specified, all of the following procedures must have already been completed: (1) the student must have submitted her or his completed dissertation to the

Ordinarily, therefore, the chairperson should require that the student submit his or her completed than sixty days prior to the official close of the semester. This allows some four to five weeks for the other members of the committee to read and approve the dissertation and for the student to prepare the final copies of the approved dissertation for submission to the Office of Research and 343

In a case in which there is insufficient evidence of satisfactory progress toward the degree, the Steering Committee may decide, in consultation with relevant members of the faculty, (1) to discontinue the student from the program, (2) to allow the student to continue under certain specified conditions, or (3) to recommend to the student a change of degree program.

Policy on Student Academic Responsibility

Academic Honesty and Dishonesty: Students in the GPRS are expected to uphold the SMU Honor Code and are under the authority of the Constitution of the Honor Council of Southern Methodist University (available on the SMU website).

It should also be noted that graduate students serving in any instructional capacity at Southern Methodist University are subject to the same standards of professional conduct as are binding on regular faculty members (see especially policies 6.1 6.3 in the University Policy Manual, http://www.smu.edu/policy/).

Administrative Procedures: The faculty of the Graduate Program in Religious Studies has established the following procedures to be followed in dealing with incidents of suspected academic dishonesty:

1. Should an instructor believe that a student has committed an act of academic dishonesty, the instructor will notify the Director in writing. The Director will then arrange as soon as possible a meeting with the student and the instructor. The Director will be present at this meeting. Should he or she wish, the student may also have another faculty member present. At the meeting, the instructor will present her or his concerns to the student. The student may then respond to those concerns. Following this, the instructor will consult in private with both the Director and the faculty member invited by the student (if a faculty member has been invited). If after consultation, the instructor still believes that academic dishonesty has taken place, he or she will assign an appropriate penalty. (The penalty can range from a failing grade on the assignment to a failing grade for the course.) Final authority for determining whether academic dishonesty has taken place and for the determination of the penalty rests solely with the instructor.

Following the meeting, the decision of the instructor and the nature of the penalty assigned by the instructor will be communicated in writing by the Director to the student, with a copy to the instructor. Following the meeting, the instructor will also prepare a written account of the student's academic dishonesty and the penalty. This account is to be placed in the student's academic file.

Should the instructor deem the student's academic dishonesty to be sufficiently grievous as to call into question that student's fitness to continue in the program, he or she may also request that the matter be referred to the Steering Committee, for consideration of whether the student should be dismissed from the Graduate Program (see section 6).

2. A student accused of academic dishonesty has the right to appeal the decision of the instructor. Her or his appeal as described here may concern only the determination of academic dishonesty, not the grade resulting from the dishonesty. (A student wishing to appeal a grade assigned by an instructor should follow the procedures described in section 7.)

evidence, the committee is required to vote as to the question of whether the student should be allowed to continue in the program. A majority vote will be decisive.

7. The award of a grade is a matter solely within the academic discretion of the faculty member. A student who wishes to appeal an assigned grade must first discuss the matter with the faculty member who awarded the grade. If the faculty member decides not to seek a grade change, the student may petition the Director of the GPRS for a review of the faculty member's decision. The Director is not authorized to change a grade, even with the consent of the faculty member decides to seek a grade change, he or she should follow standard procedures for doing so. The Director will then report the faculty member's decision to the student. If, after discussion of the matter with the Director agrade change, the student may petition the Director, the faculty member's decision. The Director will then report the faculty member's decision to the student. If, after discussion of the matter with the Director, the faculty member's decision. The Director, the faculty member's decision to the student. If, after discussion of the matter with the Director, the faculty member's decision. The Director will then report the faculty member decides not to pursue a grade change, the student may petition the Dean of Graduate Studies for a review of the faculty member's decision. The Dean may proceed as he or she deems appropriate. By university policy, final authority in the determination of grades rests with the instructor.

Descriptions of Language Examinations

GRADUATE PROGRAM IN RELIGIOUS STUDIES

DEDMAN COLLEGE

SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY

THE FRENCH EXAM

The study of languages is considered an integral part of the Graduate Program in Religious Studies at SMU. The examination in French is designed to evaluate the candidate's ability to use academic materials written in French effectively for scholarly research. The examination requires the translation into English of passages from recent French scholarly publications in the field of theological and religious studies.

The examination will consist of two sections, the first to be completed in one hour and the second in one hour and a half:

- (A) The first will be the translation into English of a passage in French to be selected from a longer work chosen in advance* for preparatory study. This portion of the examination is to be written without the use of a dictionary.
- (B) The second will be a sight translation into English of a passage to be given at the time of the examination. The use of a dictionary will be permitted during this hour. The length of the text may vary but will normally be limited to one or two book pages at the most.

In evaluating the translations, comprehension and accuracy will be given greater weight than quantity, although, of course, a reasonable amount of material should be translated to demonstrate that research could be done effectively using the French language.

Students should see their examiners for recommendations of books to help prepare for the exam.

*Each student should select an item of scholarly work a journal article or book chapter
