COURSE DESCRIPTIONS_(SELECTED)

Undergraduate courses:

Introduction to Theology

This course examines key texts in Christian tradition, both ancient and modern, in order to gain a foundation in both Christian scripture and tradition. The purpose will be to guide students to "seek the truth about God and the world" by gaining knowledge of Catholic beliefs and practices within an ecumenical outlook. This will include a discussion of various rejections of the Christian faith as well as works by those who reject the existence of God. The course unfolds through an examination of three questions: First, Does God exist? Second, Who is God? Third, What is the relationship between God and creation?

Christian Social Thought:

Basic issues in Christian ethics are addressed through examining Protestant and Catholic social teachings.

Christology:

This course addresses the question, "Who is Jesus and what has he done?" It does so by

This course examines the moral theology of two of the greatest twentieth century theologians. It will begin by setting forth their theology, dogmatic and moral. Then it will relate that theology to moral and political topics such as gender, economics, and politics.

Christology: The Incarnation

The doctrine of the Incarnation may be the most difficult Christian claim to affirm in the modern era. Theologians as diverse as Hick, Pannenberg, McClendon, McFague and Macquarrie find the traditional Chalcedonian rendering unconvincing and in need of reinterpretation, often for moral reasons. Does the doctrine need revision? Much depends upon our answer to that question; for the relationships between God and creation, faith and reason, theology, ethics and politics are all inextricably connected to the relationship between the divine and human in the Person of Jesus. This course begins by examining the biblical basis for the doctrine, followed by an analysis of its traditional developments at the Councils of Ephesus and Chalcedon, and then in Scholasticism and the Reformation. All this will prepare us for an evaluation of modern theologians' development and/or revision of the doctrine.

Hermeneutics and Theological Method

Central to all theological endeavors, theoretical and practical, is the interpretation of Scripture. Since the rise of historical criticism and the use of scientific hermeneutical tools in the modern era, the manner and method of biblical interpretation has been fiercely contested in both the church and the academy. With the development of postmodern sensibilities, modernist scientific hermeneutics has itself come under fire. This course will explain and explore these conflicting manners and methods of biblical interpretation. It will do so by examining pre-modern, modern and post-modern hermeneutical approaches. But the purpose of the course is not simply to engage with the theoretical controversies over biblical interpretation. Primary attention will be given to actual reading practices and the possibility of examining each reader's hermeneutical assumptions and implications.

Protestant Social Ethics

This course seeks to provide students with a general understanding of the development of modern Protestant social ethics and the state of the questions it currently addresses. Students will be familiar with the rise of "social ethics" and its contemporary inheritors/contestants.

Speaking of God: Theology and Language

This course examines the theological significance of the linguistic turn in culture and philosophy. Students will be introduced into the work of the philosopher Wittgenstein and how his philosophy has made a profound impact on theology, particularly when it comes to questions of epistemology. The central question this course examines is if it is possible to speak of God after the linguistic turn. How does theology relate to "reality," imagination, culture, language and experience? In other words what does it mean to

The purpose of this course is to provide students with skills for a theological evaluation of economic theories and practices, particularly as they bear on the rise and ascendancy of the global market. First a history of economic thought will be traced from Adam Smith to John Maynard Keynes. We will pay particular attention to their moral theory and underlying philosophy. Then the tradition of economic thought within Christian theology will be traced. We will then examine theologians who use Weber, Marx and/or Aquinas and Scripture to construct a theological response to economics.

Theology and Postmodernity

This course examines the theological implications of postmodernity in philosophical and theological discourses. We will address the question, What is post-modernity and how are theologians responding to it? We will begin by examining three accounts of postmodernity from Graham Ward, Francois Lyotard and Gianni Vattimo. We will then examine "postmodern philosophers" asking what makes their work "post-modern." We will look at Emmanuel Levinas, Rene Girard, Michel Foucault, Jacques Derrida, Luce Irigaray and Julia Kristeva. Then we will discuss theological responses, appropriations and critiques of postmodernity.

Theological Ethics

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to the principal historical, theological, and philosophical sources of Christian moral theology.

Twentieth Century Contemporary Theology

This course is a genealogical inquiry into the work of some contemporary theologians -
